SYNOPSIS

A group of patriots patrols a lonely stretch of the Arizona/Mexico border. They roll out in pickups flying the flag, make camp beneath a high-voltage pylon and post lookouts on the ridge with binoculars and a camcorder, recording everything that moves through the desert.

On the Day of the Dead, the desert is crowded. Drug runners, border bandits, humanitarian groups and the undocumented are all moving through the same canyons and back roads, and before the day is out the patrol crosses paths with every one of them. When a roadside standoff erupts into a gunfight, the night is only getting started.

Because someone else is out there. A masked figure is moving through the dark with a kill list and a vigilante agenda of its own, and while the factions turn on each other, it is hunting them all. On this night, everybody is fair game.
